Once upon a time, long ago when the Earth was young, there were seven friends who lived together in the jungle: Ant, Crocodile, Elephant, Giraffe, Hyena, Lion, and Owl.

They were friends and no one ate anyone...

However as it goes,
one day while they were at play, Hyena
said: "We need a leader !"
"Who should be the leader?"

With a big yawn, Lion said, "I don't know, being the leader sounds like a lot of responsibility to me." And they began to argue again. Finally, nightfall came and they stopped to rest.

"Fire?" mumbled Elephant. "I remember fire from a long time ago - it destroyed everything!" In a panic, they said, "What do we do?" Hyena replied, "We'll all die!" And for the first time Hyena was not joking or laughing.

Lion roared, "Calm down, everyone. Calm down!
We have to move, and move quickly."

"We have to get in the water and swim to the jungle on the other side. The water will keep the fire from reaching us there."

They all worked hard to build a raft large enough to carry everyone to the jungle across the water. Everyone was in a panic to get on board.

One by one, they all found an excuse why they couldn't go and rescue Ant, all except Lion. Lion looked at everyone and realized that someone would have to go back and rescue Ant.

Large eyes and all, Owl took flight in the sky near the flames in search of Lion and Ant, but the smoke was too thick to see anyone or anything. Reluctantly Owl agreed, "We need to leave." The wind and the flames were swirling and everyone was sad because they had lost two friends. And the raft was still out of control without a sail.
